

Clare Reid

Clare joined infrastructure services business Robertson Group in 2013 with close to 20 years' experience of research, consulting and management gained from the professional services and big data sectors. She began her career in London as an economist working at consultancy Business Strategies Ltd. She then took up roles at Experian leading their Strategy, Research & Economics team and subsequently became Strategic Development Director, responsible for their public sector team in Scotland.

She is currently Director of Research & Innovation for the Robertson Group.

On joining the group, she established the Research and Innovation function over five years ago and is responsible for market insight as well as providing group businesses with innovation support. Day-to-day this brings a diverse set of challenges working with the group board, business and technical leads from a diverse range of group businesses including residential, construction, timber manufacturing and infrastructure services. She has established an R&D programme within the group, securing external funding and engaging collaboration partners.

She is one of the Construction Scotland Innovation Centre's 'Innovation Champions' and an active member of Offsite Solutions Scotland. She is a graduate of Edinburgh University's MBA programme and more recently of it's Executive Women in Leadership Programme.
