

Rachel Irwin

My name is Rachel Irwin, I am a recent History MA graduate of the University of Edinburgh, originally from Liverpool, and the current Vice President Activities & Services at Edinburgh University Students' Association. During my time at university, I was heavily involved in student societies and sport, particularly the History Society for which I was President in my final year of study and through which I played intramural netball and football, as well as being a member of Edinburgh University Ladies Rugby Club. It was my involvement in extra-curricular and student-led activity that motivated me to run for election as a Sabbatical Officer, as well as my time working for the Students' Association in the Bars department.

Whilst in office, my main aims are to improve the sense of community amongst our student body through student-led activity and student-staff collaboration, to make extra-curricular engagement more physically and financially accessible to all students, and to ensure that the Students' Association and the University are committed to sustainability throughout our student offering. After my time in office, I plan to pursue further study in global development and international relations after completing an internship with the Civil Service.
