

Kathryn Nash

Kathryn is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow on the Political Settlements Research Programme in the University of Edinburgh. She completed her PhD in politics and international studies at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS) in London. Her research focuses on norms, the role of regional organisations in the international community, and peace and security issues. Kathryn served as the early career and contract researcher representative on the Law School research committee and is the Grades 6-8 representative on the Law School management group. She is also active in the UCU branch committee and postgraduate networks, and she is particularly interested in initiatives to address casualisation and ensure wider representation on committees and working groups at all levels of the University.

Prior to beginning her PhD, Kathryn worked for the U.S. Department of State. She has a Master's degree in conflict resolution from Georgetown University and a Bachelor's degree from the George Washington University in international relations.
