

Tobias Kelly

Tobias is Professor of Political and Legal Anthropology in the School of Social and Political Science and has worked at the University of Edinburgh since 2005. In this time, he has worked across many roles: tutoring, convening large first year undergraduate courses, supervising PhDs, leading research projects, working as Head of Subject Area, Director of the Undergraduate School, and Co-Director of Research for the School. He has also collaborating with colleagues from many different Schools across the University. His research focuses on human rights and political violence, and he has carried out ethnographic and archival work in Britain, Israel/Palestine and at the UN, amongst other places. He has a PhD in Anthropology from the LSE and an MA in Social Anthropology from the University of Edinburgh. He has previously worked at the University of Oxford and the LSE. He is a Fellow of the British Academy.

Register of Interests

Committee Memberships

- University Court
- Remuneration Committee