

Academic Staff Member Election 2020

Lucy Lowe

I am a lecturer in Social Anthropology and the Director of the Edinburgh Centre for Medical Anthropology (EdCMA). If elected to this position on the University Court, I will bring my experience of being a student and a member of staff (on both fixed-term and open-ended contracts) at the University of Edinburgh. I am dedicated to principles of equality and diversity, and firmly believe they should be at the forefront of the University's priorities. Our working, research, and learning spaces should all be fostered and underscored by a commitment to inclusion, regardless of gender, sex, race, colour, ethnicity, national origin or migrant status, disability, sexual orientation, religious or philosophical belief, age, socio-economic background, or family circumstances. If elected to the University Court, I will continue to work towards making our university a welcoming place of outstanding research and learning that puts the needs and aspirations of students and staff at the forefront of the University's mission and strategic vision.

As Director of EdCMA, I have experience working and collaborating with colleagues from across the University. My door is open to colleagues and I'm keen to bring their voices to the Court. The University's reputation and values reflect our work as teachers and researchers and, as a member of the University Court, I will help to shape the University mission and vision in ways that safeguard a reputation and values that do justice to our collective efforts and of which we can all be proud.
